Children's delight

Toys from Christ

"Everyday's a beautiful day when you have a sunny outlook like me. I'm the bear who helps you find the happy things that each day can bring."

— written on box containing Funshine Bear, a member of the Care Bear toy collection.

The small plastic bear with a smiling sun painted on his tummy has a lot to be happy about these days.

The miniature Funshine Bear and the rest of the Care Bear collection are selling like there is no tomorrow.

In fact, so are many other toy items that were once left orphaned on the store shelves, victims of a gloomy economy.

As the national recession continues to melt, shoppers have found themselves with more money to spend this holiday season.

Consequently, toy stores and toy departments around the country aren't experiencing too many silent nights during the traditional "Christmas rush." All is bright, but it isn't so calm.

Much publicity has been generated by the shoppers trampling each other to grab the popular Cabbage Patch Dolls, raggedy moppets that come with their own adoption certificate.

And customers are crowding to buy the large Care Bear stuffed dolls or at least the plastic miniatures.

"People come grab (the smaller bears) in desperation, just to get something that says 'Care Bear' on it," says Steve Reeves, assistant manager for Kay Bee Toy Store at the Montclair Plaza.

Minutes later Reeves would receive a telephone call from Santa Clara, near San Jose, asking if the store had any more Cabbage Patch Dolls.

Reeves, 20, of San Bernardino says toy sales this year at the store have risen more than 50 percent over last year.

Gemco membership department store in Rancho Cucamonga reports an increase of 69 percent.

And nationwide, net sales from the 169 Toys-R-Us stores in 26 states have jumped 22 percent, according to Ann Popper, director of corporate communications.

In a telephone interview from her office in New Jersey, Popper said sales for the first nine months of 1983 hit $616.4 million, as compared with $496.4 million for the same period last year.

She added the company did not experience any troubles selling toys during the recent recession. Profits have grown steadily over the years.

However, Reeves, who sold toys at a Sears department store last Christmas, remembered local customers did not seem to be spending.

"People were being so picky about prices," he said.

Robert Shank, 39, of Pomona was one of the financially cautious shoppers.

"Last year there just didn't seem to be as much left over (to buy toys)," said Shank, who has budgeted up to $200 this Christmas for toys.

Shank's daughters, 8-year-old Heather and 4-year-old Heidi, were on hand one afternoon at Kay Bee toys to show dad how to spend the money.

"They like Snoopys and Smurfs," said Shank.

Other children also yanked their parents through the aisles lined with Mr. T dolls, Dudgeons and Dragons characters and Return of the Jedi toys.

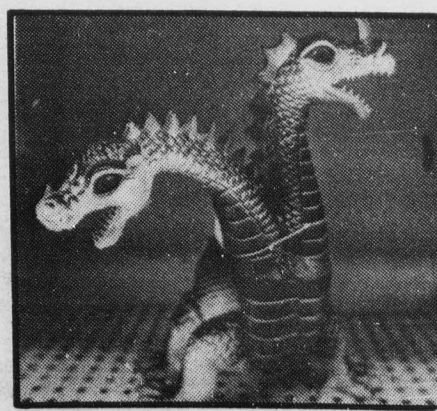

They educated their elders on such items as the "Stomper Mobile Force Secret Mission Set," or more simply a small tank and some toy soldiers.

Many of the more popular toys, including a $17 toy worm that glows when hugged, are not available at the Montclair store and are generally scarce.

"There are a lot of hot items this year," said Reeves. "I'm out of most of them." □

Christmas present ... and Christmas past

What might a child have found under the Christmas tree in the early 1900's?

Dolls were ever-popular among girls. Whether with a bisque or porcelain head, cloth or wooden bodies, dolls were favorites, according to Eunice Mitchell, docent at Chaffey Communities Cultural Center in Upland.

"Dolls were an important part of a little girl's life. They were very precious," Mitchell said. "Families would buy the heads and make the bodies for the dolls. Not all dolls came with kid bodies. Pioneer children's dolls were made out of corn cobs and appleheads."

Even dolls with bisque heads found their way into child's play time. "Girls played with them very carefully," Mitchell said. Dolls on display at the museum show signs of wear and tear.

"On one of our dolls (with a breakable face) the hands were very worn and the dress was ready to fall to pieces. We made another dress using the original dress as a pattern," she said.

Other toys one might find in a young girl's possession were accessories for their dolls, dollhouses or replicas of what was in mother's kitchen.

"Little doll clothes trunks were popular in 1880's. Girls had little dish cupboards, little furniture, chairs, beds, cribs, and little stoves," Mitchell said.

On display in the museum is a child-size iron stove, made exactly to look like mother's, complete with functioning knobs. "They often had little coal buckets and shovels as accessories," according to Mitchell.

Boys seemed to get more pocket-size toys, with marbles, spinning tops, whistles, toy soldiers and sometimes a pocket knife.

Carol Manley, of the Brass Balloon antique store in Upland, said most of the toys were wooden and hand-made.

"Children had rocking horses, sleds, and bicycles. The bicycles were expensive and not like ours today," Manley said.

Wagons had iron-rimmed, metal wheels, marbles were not made of glass, but of clay. "They had some wind-up and squeeze toys with springs, and played games like stick-in-the-hoop. On the farm, they hung a rope on a tree and had a swing," Manley said.

Parker Brothers, Milton Bradley and the Loughlin Brothers had a portion of children's free time with games dating back as far as the early 1900's.

Old games on display at the cultural center in Upland are "Hokum," a kind of bingo game; "Grandma's Game of Riddles," a question and answer game; "Pit," a game still sold in stores today; and "Grandma's Improved Geographical Game," with questions about locations around the world.

"Not necessarily a Christmas gift but something young children played with in those times were kites," Mitchell said.

Old-fashioned toys will be on display throughout December at the Chaffey Communities Cultural Center is at 525 18th St. in Upland. The museum is open Wednesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays from 1 to 4 p.m.

Chaffey Communities Cultural Center, is the home for these old-fashion toys. The doll buggy, one of the oldest toys displayed in the museum, was handmade from a bedspring sometime between 1876 to 1880's. Other popular toys of the time were question and answer games, miniature furniture, teddy bears and dolls like this one made in 1871 of bisque.

Amodt predicts peace on fire board

By Jim Marxen

For the price of two postage stamps, Pete Amodt got four years on the Foothill Fire board.

Not a bad deal, he says, when you consider other candidates were spending thousands of dollars for the same seat.

Now in his fourth year on Rancho Cucamonga's wildest government panel, Amodt is looking forward to some peace.

Known as a quiet man, Amodt stayed out of the limelight while his compatriots at times verbally batted each other over the head.

But when the board's composition changed drastically in last month's elections, Amodt felt peace was at hand.

"I think the public is tired of hearing about negativism," he said. "Now let's get down to work."

He figures that will happen now that a new board has been seated. "I hope to see more engine companies, more stations and response times lessened. I hope we don't remain static."

First appointed to the board in 1979, Amodt ran for re-election two years later, spending 36 cents to mail in his campaign expenditure statements.

The next two years were tumultuous for the district.

"I was very uncomfortable with what was going on," Amodt said. "I was more concerned with fire protection and emergency medical services than getting involved with a bunch of minor arguments."

Not all the arguments were minor, however. A decision to reorganize the district's administration sparked a major disagreement between board members and the public.

Amodt originally favored the plan, then publically reversed himself.

"I was at fault," he admitted. "I was getting ready to go on vacation and I did a foolish thing in voting yes. After a week I started checking around and said, 'hey, what have I done?' I felt I'd done something wrong."

"I admitted my mistake."

A teacher at an Alta Loma elementary school, Amodt said he learned patience as a principal and applied that patience to the fire board.

"I knew that if you keep your mouth shut, you learn," he said. "In my first two years on the board I listened to what they presented and it helped me when the turmoil started building up."

"I never really got down ... I got mad. I got mad over the bickering back and forth over trivial matters."

Amodt said he made several attempts to calm tempers, urging the board to "get back to business".

It didn't always work, but Amodt says he remained on good terms with his fellow board members.

"I think our relationship has been one where we've had rapport," he said of his work with former board member Daniel Richards and board member Steve Wheatley.

Both were at odds with Amodt on some major issues.

Aside from the "bickering," Amodt feels the district has operated well.

"The community is lucky to have those firefighters," he said. "They're good."

He describes himself as "public-oriented" and a peacemaker among his fellow board members.

"I hope to be the arbitrator," he said. "Not on all issues but on some. I'm just doing my job." □

Brant Clinard

Pete Amodt feels peace is at hand for the Foothill Fire board. After two years of controversy, Amodt said he's going to welcome a lessening of tensions.

Why not make a movie called 'Library'?

By Pat Castaneda
Principal Librarian
Upland Public Library

When is someone going to do a movie or TV series on a library? You know the type I mean — like "Hotel" or "Airport." We have just as much drama and comedy here as either of those places.

For example, every afternoon we have a group of salesmen who come in and take over the public phone for their business purposes. They make sales and contact calls, and they receive calls. When they answer the phone they give the name of their business, as though they are in their offices and if there is more than one here at a time, they don't always know for sure who should answer the phone and which business name to give. They always show up in mid-afternoon, and about the time they're through with their calls, the junior high kids show up wanting to use the phone. Now you can guess the degree of drama and tension that results when one of the businessmen is a little late in leaving, or some of the kids are a bit early in arriving, and they are all trying to use the phone. Especially interesting situations develop when the kids manage to get hold of the phone while one of the men is expecting a call, or hoping to make a call.

I doubt you saw a toilet explode in "Hotel." If they made a movie "Library" you would have that thrill. You would see the toilet, in living color, blown right off the foundation to which it was bolted by backed-up water pressure. And speaking of explosions, you could see an electrical explosion and fire in the library basement, caused by flooding, with a total loss of power for days and a resultant situation similar to the "Poseidon Adventure," where people were trapped inside a sunken ocean liner. I will admit our situation wasn't quite as drastic as that. We brought in doughnuts and pizzas and continued working in coats and longjohns.

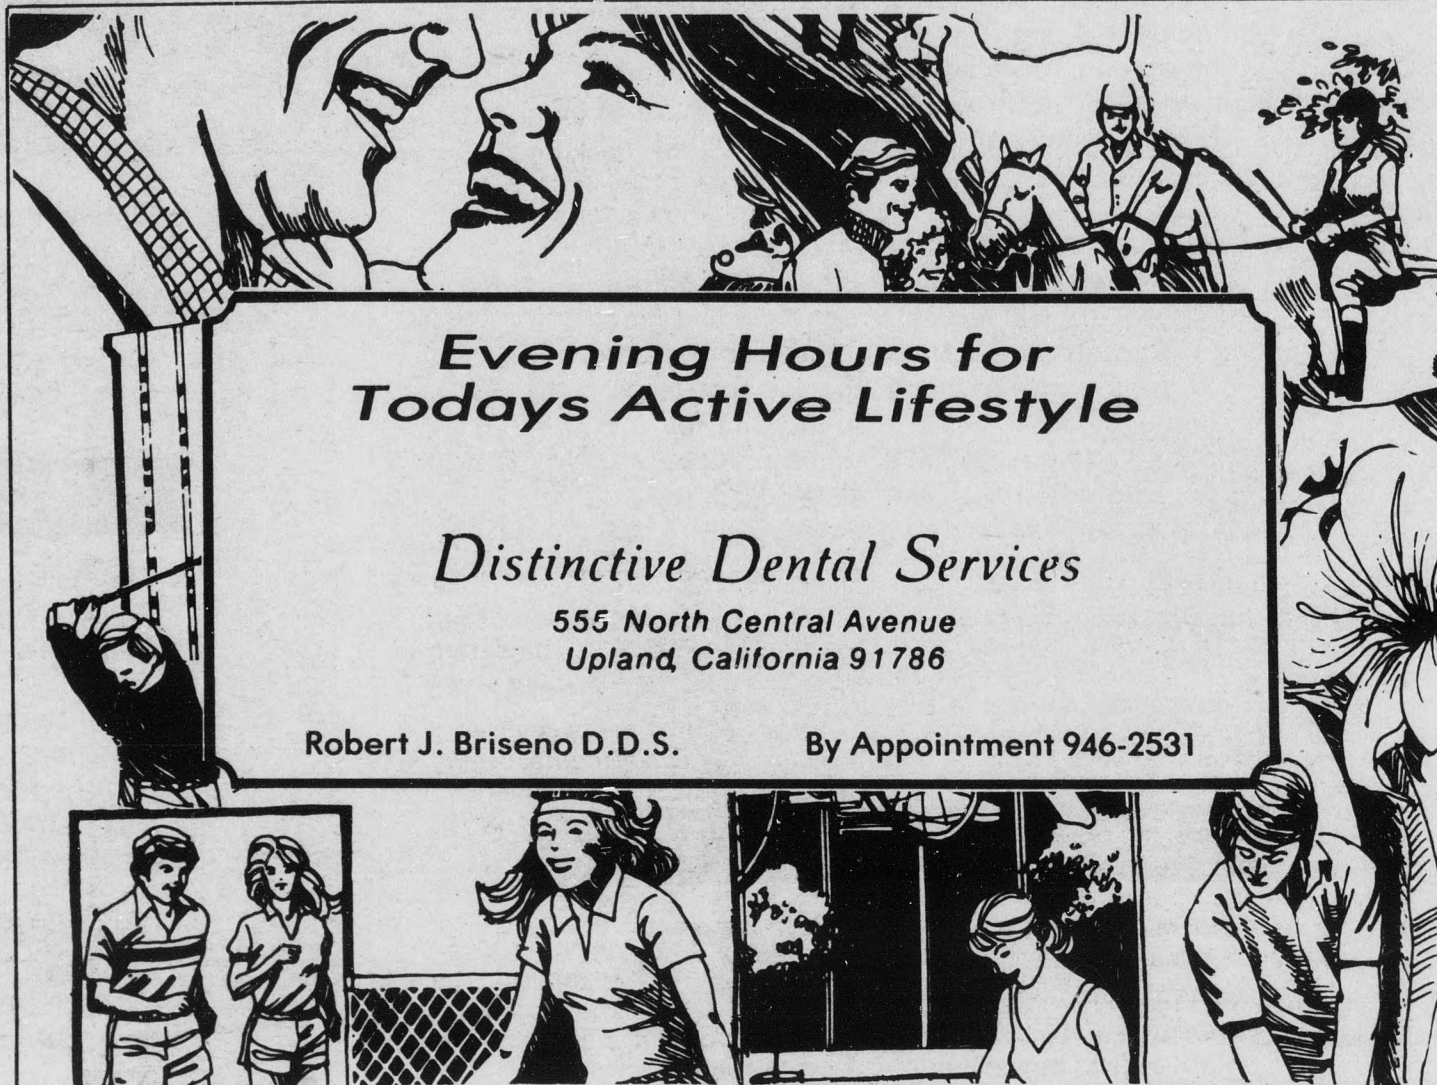

There is plenty of criminal activity here in the library that could add suspense to our movie, but one stands out from all the others. We have a young, well-dressed male patron who comes in, watches for his chance, and when the opportunity occurs he puts glue on one shoe of a young female patron and immediately leaves the premises. These incidents occurred occasionally over a period of several years, so gradually enough people on the staff came to recognize him that we could call the police right away when he came in. However, we have not caught him.

Our movie "Library" could also include musical interludes, for we don't have booths for listening to our record collection. We have a record player on a specially built table, and we rely on patrons using earphones to maintain a degree of quiet. However, sometimes patron's enthusiasm for the music overcomes their inhibitions, and they sing quite loudly along with the music. Perhaps because of the earphones they are not quite aware they are singing aloud. These concerts are not of

Health screening deadline drawing near

Parents of first graders still have until Dec. 30 to obtain the state required health checkup for first grade entry.

According to state law, parents must provide proof that first graders have received a health screening exam during the 18 months before entering first grade or within 90 days after entry.

The only exception to the law is for parents who sign a written waiver stating they do not want their child to have a health checkup.

In San Bernardino County, the Department of Public Health, Child and Adolescent Health Program, along with private physicians, help carry out the law by providing health screening exams.

The law is intended to help children get the best and healthiest start in school. "All too often, disabling conditions in young children go undetected," said George Lobell, director of the Office of Health Education. "These conditions can hinder the child's important initial success in school."

Conditions often identified by the Health Department include vision problems, obesity, ear infections and anemia. Sometimes early detection can save a child from a lifetime disability.

Parents can get their child's physical from their private physician, through their prepaid health plan, military base or the health department's Child and Adolescent Health Clinics or from private providers.

Both county clinics and private providers registered with the program offer health checkups free to low-income children and youth. A fee is charged for all services to other children. Parents without a private physician can schedule an appointment at the local Child Health clinic.

For information and appointments, call 628-2914 for Chino and 988-1346 for Ontario and surrounding areas.

THE ARGUERS

Q. Why do some people argue all the time? If they want to stay married, how can they learn to STOP arguing?

A. Unfortunately, some couples settle into destructive patterns of relating that become very difficult to break. Each person is frightened that a kind, friendly overture will be met with a hostile response. The safest way to stay in contact becomes via fighting—you're not vulnerable then. Nevertheless, there is a secret wish or hope that the other spouse will take the first step to improve the relationship. Each person waits, instead of initiating positive action.

Couples who want to turn this situation around have to take what seems to be a big risk—i.e., stop contributing their part of the tension and instead begin bringing POSITIVE comments, suggestions and actions to the relationship. If each person is consistent and does his or her part, it will be difficult for the current problem to continue. After all, it does take two people to keep a marital conflict going.

Some couples engaged in constant arguing are repeating what they witnessed as children: marital discord. They have simply not learned more nurturing ways of relating. For such a couple, professional counseling may be a very positive step in asserting their desire to find a new way of being in a relationship.

Mail early, postal service advises

By Terri Tirella

Package movers, including the postal service and private mail carriers, are urging people to mail items early.

"Normally when mailing to the East Coast, you should allow two weeks for surface parcels," said Lois Skovgaard, postmaster at Guasti Post Office.

She and her staff encourage people to do their mailing from Guasti. "Guasti is a small office so we don't experience the problems with volume other post offices have and don't have customers waiting in long lines."

"We are urging people to mail early. 'Make sure your love arrives in time' is our slogan. Usually packages take about a week to 10 days but during Christmas it takes longer," she continued.

According to John Solberg, postmaster at Etiwanda, all local post offices will be open Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. to service customers during the holiday season.

"We are busy (during the last two weeks of December), but we don't have the volume that might come out of an office in Pomona."

"We (in Etiwanda) get a lot of out-of-town customers who come here to avoid the lines," Solberg said.

To assure a Christmas present arrives on time, postal customers should pay careful attention to packaging.

"We like to see a label attached to each item inside the package so if it is damaged we can still deliver the items inside," he continued.

A clearly printed address on the package with zip codes and good cushioning for fragile items will aid in quick and safe delivery.

In readying a package, cellophane tape and masking tape are not a good idea, according to Solberg.

"Masking tape was designed to help you paint a room, not seal a package. It has no stretch," said

Out-of-date textbooks to be sold

Cucamonga School District will offer textbooks no longer being used in schools for sale during regular business hours, 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., at the office, 8776 Archibald Ave.

Proceeds are a donation under state law allowing disposal of surplus or obsolete instructional materials "by donation to children or adults in the state of California, or any foreign countries for the purpose of increasing the general literacy of the people."

COMP prof Wong wins 2-year grant

A $7,750 research grant for each of two years has been awarded to Stanley K. Wong, assistant professor of pharmacology at the College of Osteopathic Medicine of the Pacific in Pomona.

The grant from the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Foundation of Washington, D.C. will be used by Dr. Wong to conduct research on "The Role of the Cellular Sodium-Potassium Pump in Hypertension of Experimental Diabetes."

Dr. Wong, a resident of Upland, joined the COMP faculty in 1981. He received his doctorate in pharmacology from the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

Educator offers tips on disciplining for parents

By Terri Tirella

"Disciplining with Love," the first parent education meeting held at Guasti Elementary and Preschool, gave parents an opportunity to question Penny Hirschman, curriculum coordinator for San Bernardino County Schools.

"Parents who attend education meetings are usually not the ones we need to talk to; they usually are the better parents," Hirschman said.

She discussed the dilemma parents have with discipline, problems and ways to solve them at home and at school.

"I encourage parents to give their children love and respect; that can eliminate lots of problems," she continued.

"Parents are always blamed for whatever children do wrong and are never trained to handle parenthood. We learn through assimilation, by trying to not make the mistakes our parents made, and from models, watching how our parents raised their children."

Being a parent is an enormous task, according to Hirschman. "Your job doesn't stop when you leave the office. You don't always know all the solutions."

She said parents can't be expected to be perfect and there is no foolproof system of discipline. "We have to teach them responsibility for them to be effective. We have to teach them responsibility for their actions. We have help them, guide, direct them and treat them with respect."

She said parents feeling good about themselves have an easier time loving their children. "Caring for your children means a lot of giving. You have to love yourself first before you love your children."

Hirschman offered pointers for parents in dealing with discipline problems. "Plan carefully to eliminate opportunities for disciplinary problems to develop. Be patient, tolerant, kind, firm, fair and understanding."

Hirschman, who is mother to two children, 9 and 11, said being patient and tolerant isn't always easy.

"Sometimes we're too worried with our own lives, jobs, marriages, to be the way we want to be," she said.

"Parents need a good sense of humor and should use it. Let your child know what is expected of him — expect the best. Be sensitive to your child's feelings and encourage, don't scold."

Hirschman said parents should find punishments suitable for each child. "For my son, losing the privilege of watching television in the evening is a punishment; for my daughter, television is no big thing, so not allowing her to have her friend sleep over or vice versa is more effective."

She also said parents should separate the deed from the doer. "Don't reject the child because of something he did. Tell him you are disappointed with his behavior, not him. Encourage him, build his ego."

"Give your child responsibility, look for the best in them. Eliminate lecturing. Let your child know he is unique," she said.

Parents asking for help included one woman who has three preschool children. "My husband works nights and tries to sleep in the afternoons. I have a hard time getting all three of my children to be quiet. When I try to plan a quiet activity, either reading or some singing, my son starts pulling his sister's hair and running around the house. He makes the other kids as active as he is."

Hirschman said that perhaps the boy gets reinforced for his bad behavior by the attention the mother pays him while quieting him down so his dad can sleep. "The other kids say 'this is how he gets mom's attention so this is the way for us to get it.'"

Hirschman suggested the mother try to reinforce positive behavior on the part of the boy. "When the other children are listening to a story and he starts acting up tell him 'see how nicely your sister is behaving, sitting quietly and listening? Why don't you sit down and join us?'"

About a dozen parents, teachers and teacher aides attended the meeting.

"Working with children, you can never know enough," said Dee Luevano, a teacher's aide in Cucamonga Elementary School.

"I thought I might learn something I could apply where I work and with my own children," she said.

Luevano, a resident of Cucamonga, is studying for her teaching credential. "This meeting emphasized a lot of what I have already learned."

Remembering the way it was in Upland

By JOHN H. NICHOLSON

For a change, I think I will cover a mixture of small items of "local lore." Old timers probably know them well, but others may find them of interest.

Several schools in what is now Upland have come and gone. One of the earliest grade schools was at the corner of Ninth Street and Euclid Avenue. My dad went to it. As it became too small, Upland Grammar School was built on Tenth Street, now Arrow Highway, just to the east of our present post office.

It was a two-story brick building, with a sizeable auditorium at its center. Fannie D. Noe (No-ee) was the principal when I went there, and it was later named after her. A half-circle driveway looped to and from Tenth Street, with the front door located halfway around it. The drive, which remains today, encompassed a fine lawn. That is where we wound the Maypole, and carried out similar fancy functions.

When the present elementary school was built on Fifth Avenue, the brick building was torn down. The earlier site on Ninth Street became a lumber yard, eventually known as Upland Lumber Co., and more recently becoming the home office of Upland Savings and Loan Association.

At one time, an old frame school house stood on West 18th Street. Long-time school Superintendent Harold Cook says it had to be of very early vintage, as it was held together by the old-style, square nails.

That building was moved in 1919 to a site on the east side of Campus Avenue, at about 13th Street. There it was known as Sierra Vista School and was particularly for the use of kids of Hispanic ancestry. The school is now gone, but the fenced yard that surrounded it remains.

A larger elementary school was built on the 18th Street site and it later gave way to the present Pioneer Junior High School.

When I was about knee-high to a stunted duck, there was a grade school on the north side of West Eighth Street, almost halfway between Euclid and San Antonio avenues. However, it was in the Ontario School District, as the Ontario city limits came up the center of Euclid to Arrow Highway, and then westward to Mountain Avenue.

I think that the site now has an Ontario water reservoir in its northern part. My favorite uncle, Earl Hawthorne, lived on West Eighth. He felt that he was an Uplander, not an Ontarian. It must have been in the early 30s when he and neighbors pushed through a campaign and the Upland boundary moved to where it is now, on the south edge of the San Bernardino Freeway.

As grade school students, we kids held an Upland policeman in some awe. He was Carmen Lehman, a rather dashing fellow, who drove a big, white Packard touring car when on patrol.

A "touring car" had a fixed windshield, front and rear seats, a fold-away fabric top and side curtains for bad weather. Movies of early day gangsters often show them.

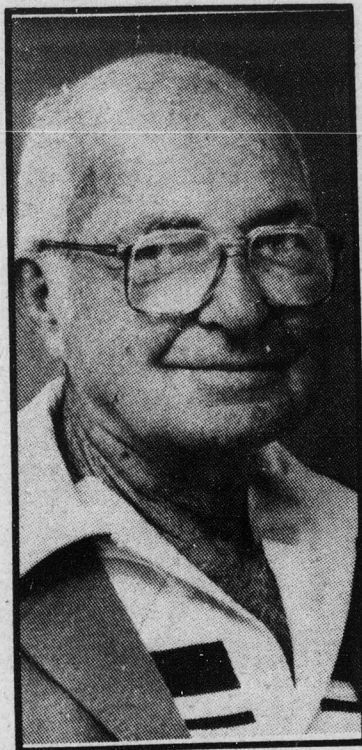

Max Hawkins recently reminded me of one heroic rescue done by Lehman and the impressive Packard. By then, the corners at Euclid and Foothill had "stop signs." Staked out nearby, Lehman waited for someone to pull a no-no.

Suddenly, a big truck loaded with rocks sailed down Euclid and through the stop signs, billowing clouds of brake smoke. A horrified person was sitting atop the rocks. It was obviously a run-away situation.

The Packard roared to life in quick pursuit. Catching up, Lehman pulled in front of the impending disaster and slowed. As the truck bumper met on the rear, Lehman used his brakes to slow the truck down.

Gradually, they both came to a stop, and another note was added to the heroics of our Upland Police Department. Lehman soon began to equal the fame of our earlier officer, "Two-Gun Louie" Kronmeyer, and his trusty motorcycle.

Our area's first airport was on a narrow patch of ground between Ontario's two railroad tracks, just west of San Antonio Avenue. It was just a dirt strip, with a variety of World War I planes on hand.

One amazing foreign plane had a Gnome engine. The crankshaft stood still while the engine

Co-op sells only handmade items

By Ian Fallis

Many Fine Things is a bit vague, but it's about the only way to describe the handcrafts-filled shop by the same name in Upland.

"We have everything from hand-carved wooden pull toys to handmade quilts and afghans in all sizes," said owner Marge Twydell.

Since Twydell took over the 232 N. Second Ave. store in August, she has remodeled and expanded it. The office and storeroom were turned into a Christmas room, filled with decorations and gift ideas.

But everything in the shop could be given as a gift.

The work of some 60 local artisans — the majority from Upland or Ontario — is for sale at the shop.

All the artisans are members of a cooperative and each works at the shop one day a month. "We have different people in the store every day," Twydell said. "I'm here a lot, though."

Women make more doctor visits, study says

Although they tend to live longer, "women have more illnesses and disabilities, make more physician visits and are hospitalized at higher rates than men," the Public Health Service reports.

A recently printed study, based on 1979 data, says women are more aware of symptoms than men and that may be why women get their symptoms treated and rest when they're sick.

Because most women get health care during pregnancy they may be more likely to realize they have something wrong, more likely to tell a doctor and get treatment or start changing unhealthy habits to prevent, delay or minimize sickness or death, the report says.

The analysis says men go to a doctor for injury more often than women, but are not as likely to take bed rest to help the healing process.

The report draws no conclusions on whether men die earlier because they don't take care of themselves.

The report, "Sex Differences in Health and Use of Medical Care" says the numbers suggest but do not prove that males may be biologically disadvantaged compared with females — starting with birth.

He says he should have been born 100 years ago.

He's a prospector who also breaks and trains horses and a farrier who customizes leather goods as well as making portraits.

He is known as J.D. Silver, an easy-going, slow-talking man, wearing a black hat with a rattle-snake skin band and, of course, boots. Silver works at his leather craft with Paul and Sons, a Rancho Cucamonga shoe store, where he is allowed to set his own hours and be his own man. "The owner is a good friend of mine," Silver said.

Silver has a lot of friends. He's made them all over the continent. He's made them with a divergent group of people and even animals. And he's made them during his short stays in the large variety of professions his free spirit allows him to undertake.

He said he owes his versatility to having grown up on ranches in Texas. "When you work as a ranch hand, you get paid $65 to $85 a month, plus room and board. You find yourself running short of funds so anything you wanted, you had to learn to make, improvise or repair, using raw materials."

Silver learned how to handle hides and tanning by making vests or chaps. "You had to be self-sufficient, efficient and reliable. Sometimes you were alone in a line shack for three to four weeks at a time. You had to count on yourself and your own wits."

He said his ranching career started when he was "just about grewed up" at age 15. "It's a peaceful existence. You don't have the pressures and hazards you have when contending with pollution and noise of the city."

"You got up early in the morning and took care of your horse, had breakfast and maybe mended fences. Growing up, you had a standard to meet, you learned to handle responsibility at an early age."

"You never said you were too young or too small to do a job — you just did it. If you couldn't lift something, you found some way to move it. It's not surprising to see 7- and 9-year-olds operating big equipment," Silver said.

Coming to California was fine for a visit, according to Silver, "but I swore I would never come to live here. Disneyland and Knotts' Berry Farm are fun, but I never wanted to live amongst a million people."

He said he decided to give it a shot because of California's "dynamite winters. It doesn't get cold, you don't have sandstorms, don't even have to wear a shirt."

"Your bones start to creak and ache, from all the times I've landed wrong (when breaking horses), I thought it would be nice to wear shirt sleeves all year 'round," he said.

The cowboy life that Silver loves is not without its risks, however. Silver suffered a broken leg Sept. 1, when he attempted to break a horse.

"I become more a friend and try to get him to trust me. Sometimes I get one that don't want to be friends and he breaks me instead," he said.

"I can't say I'm not afraid, but I'm willing to take a chance, make the effort. Most of my life, Lady Luck has danced with me, but like a lady she is fickle and sometimes may turn her head. Most of my skills are good, but sometimes an unknown factor can come from behind and bite you."

Another side of led Silver to complete an associate arts degree in computer science. "I was offered (a four-year college) scholarships but I wasn't sure I wanted to go so I turned them down. I thought the scholarships should go to a hard-working student, maybe one who gets Cs but puts in a lot of effort trying, that's what I told them (school officials)," he said.

owboy

The native-born Texan said he did well in computer programming, not because he wanted to be a programmer but to make his mother happy.

"I couldn't work a 9-to-5 job. I'm a free spirit," Silver said. "When I'm up in the mountains, hearing the wind in the trees, seeing (nature) everything around me, I know that's where I belong."

Silver's free-spirit has taken him throughout the United States, Canada, Mexico and included a stint in the military.

In the military, Silver said he was a personal attache and driver. "I have driven (James) Schlesinger, Carl Sagan and (a part of) the Honduras junta. I got to talk to them. The colonel with the Honduras junta was interesting."

Silver doesn't talk much about serving during the Vietnam war. He says it was too sad a time for him.

Silver speaks Spanish, which he learned while living three years in Mexico. He said he found it easy to learn because he learned how to pick up a foreign language from his mother, who was from Canada and spoke French.

"I can still read and translate French, but I don't speak the language," he said.

Silver said he has some understanding of German because of his father's German-born influence.

Shoeing horses is another of Silver's specialties. After becoming interested in being a farrier, he enrolled in a vocational education class and studied skills. He is now certified.

According to Silver, time is important in getting a proper fit in horse-shoeing. "It might take me all day to fit a horse with shoes, but if that's what it takes to do it right, that's what you have to do."

"If I don't do a good job, the horse could be in pain or go lame. Horses feet weren't meant to wear shoes, man made that decision for them," he said.

Silver seems to have a way with the animals. "They like me. I take time to let them know me so they can trust me."

Prospecting is another love of Silver's. "Once you pan for gold and you see a little color, you kind of get the fever. Some people get gold fever really bad. I do it because I enjoy it."

He said he does a lot of his prospecting in the local mountains. After his last trip locally he discovered a ruby. "I'm having it assayed but I think it's a pretty good one. I found it in these mountains, on a private claim."

Silver said he found the ruby while running a dredge with a friend. "I was working the concentrate and it ended up in my pan."

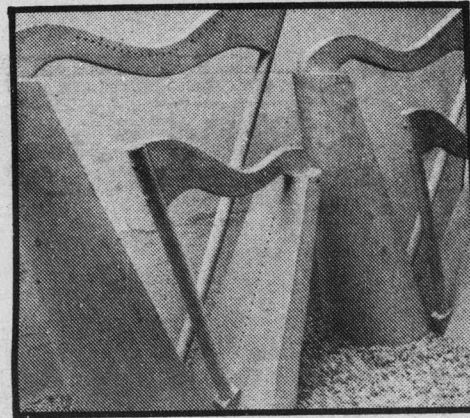

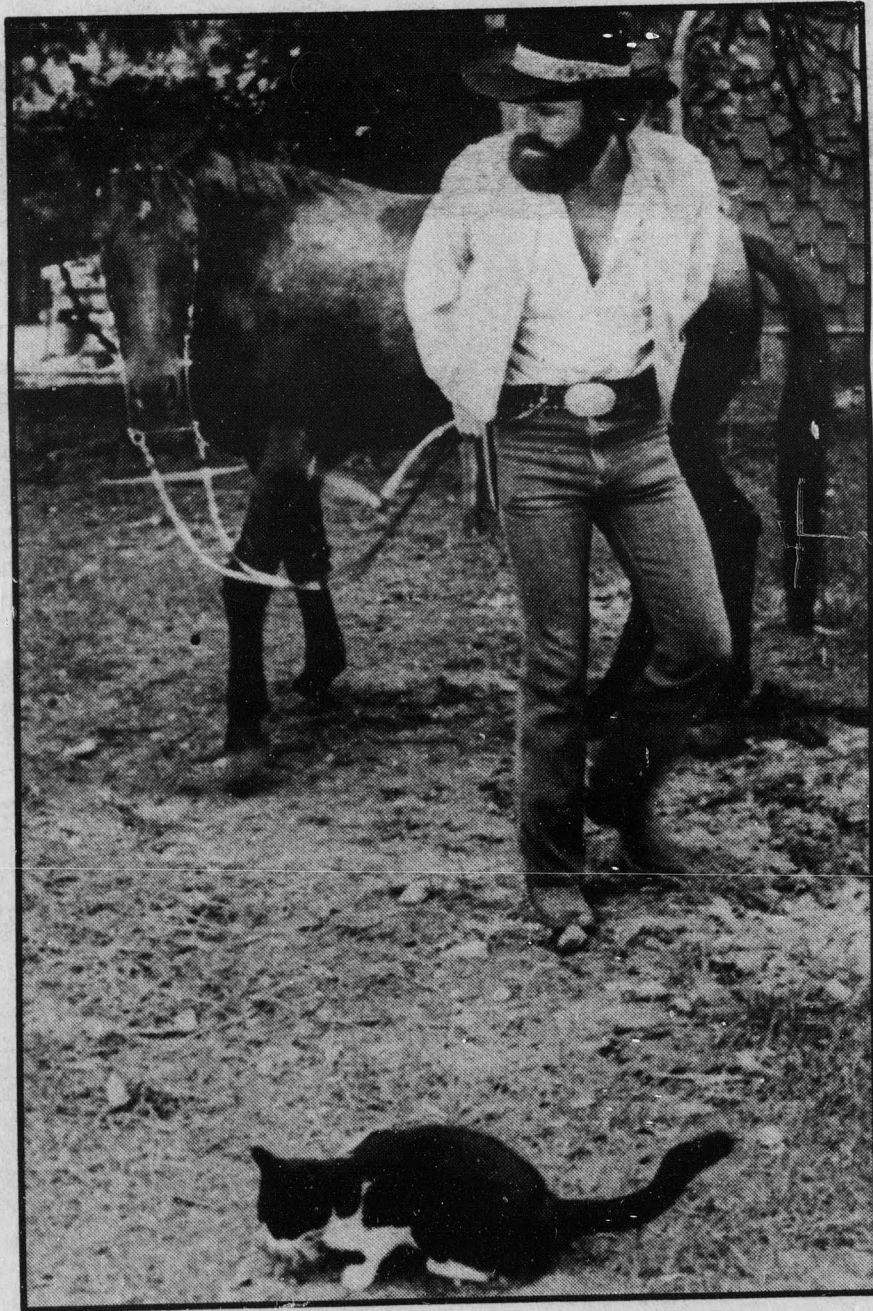

"A raw ruby looks nothing like what people expect it to be. It can be from a light red to dark red, but once you see it you never forget what it looks like. This is one of the biggest rubies I have found," Silver said.

He said prospecting and claim jumping haven't changed much from what had happened in the Old West "except there are less people getting shot."

"People don't always go by the (prospectors) code or respect the law. Even now there are claim jumpers, which are still handled with guns. Everyone going out (into wilder regions) prospecting is heavily armed."

Silver is known to some of his friends as Carl. "He is a quiet, private side of me. He is very reserved and keeps a low profile."

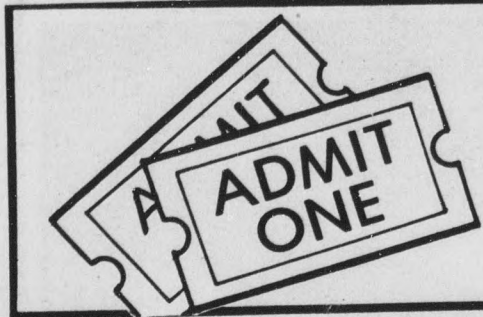

Silver said he is considering opening his own leather-works shop in the area. Other future plans include helping other people in any way he can. "Being able to do that, to help other people, is very important to me. I wouldn't do anything to jeopardize that." □

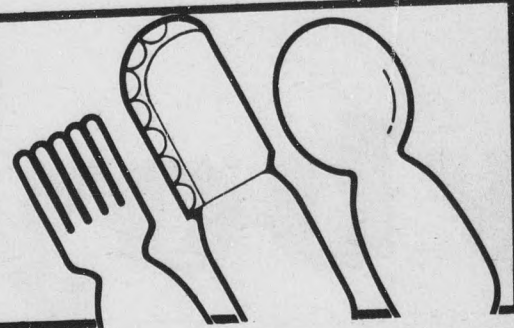

Silver tries to befriend a horse when training it. "Sometimes I get one that don't want to be friends and he breaks me in-stead." He said he owes his versatility to having grown up on ranches — anything someone wanted they had to learn to make. Silver will take his time while breaking Chico, a stallion. His cat, Boots doesn't seem to mind.

Co-op attracts patrons from miles around

Prices range "probably from $2 on up to $400. That's for the handmade quilts and afghans," Twydell said.

Most of the money goes straight to the artists. The co-op takes 10 percent of the purchase price to pay for rent, utilities, fees and supplies.

"I think our prices are exceedingly good, because there's no middleman," she said.

The artisans can make a bundle, "depending on how hard they work, and whether they've got a saleable item," Twydell said. "I had one girl who made over $1,400 in one month."

But before anything can go on sale at Many Fine Things, Twydell must approve it. "I don't allow two artists in who do the same thing," she said, and other items must have "only the highest quality and professional workmanship."

Others are not let in because the shop is already crowded. "I wouldn't be able to display their merchandise to the best advantage."

The reputation of the shop is widespread.

"I know that we have customers who come from as far as Irvine and the beach areas."

"We have a lot of people who just browse our shop for ideas," like interior designers, she said. Sometimes the designers will make special orders after seeing something that interests them.

Other people also ask for special orders, though they account for only about 5 percent of the shop's business. Most is off-the-shelf.

"One girl is making special birdhouse ornaments for the president of the California Real Estate Board to give to all her board members this Christmas," Twydell said.

Twydell herself wanted to be a designer "all my life."

After she retired from a local medical college, she started making aprons. "I expanded to Mom and Me apron sets, and Dad and Helper apron sets."

"I've designed ten different activity aprons for children." Some are for sale at the shop.

Like her aprons, she doesn't hang around the shop all the time. "I can come and go. I don't have to stay in a little cubicle someplace." And that's just the way she likes it. □

The busiest time of the year is at hand. I'm sure you're all in the midst of shopping, wrapping gifts and addressing cards. This is really not the ideal time to try to plan meals. Do yourself a big favor and take the entire gang out to eat or how about picking up something tasty on your way home from work or shopping and relax while dining without all the hassle of preparing and cleaning up.

Magic memories still fill J.B.'s life

His embarrassment has faded over the decades, but the magician still remembers the time President Calvin Coolidge upstaged him.

J.B. Williams, a Pomona retiree who spent most of his career as a professional magician, was just a fledgling amateur when he and other Naval trainees from Richmond, Va., were invited to Washington to meet some congressmen. One of the lawmakers urged him to perform a few tricks as a demonstration of corpsman "versatility."

What he didn't know ahead of time was that President Coolidge would be there. When Coolidge arrived, Williams decided to play one of his tricks on the president.

At Williams' request, Coolidge dropped his pocket watch into an empty bag. The president showed no reaction as Williams slammed the bag against a table, jumped on it, and then emptied its shattered contents, mechanism-by-mechanism, into Coolidge's cupped hands.

And then the magic. The president dropped the watch pieces back into the bag. The magician waved the bag around and again dumped its contents into Coolidge's hands, but this time the president's watch was again whole.

"He didn't say a word," Williams recalled in a recent interview. "He just held the watch and looked at me, not amused or bemused." But the magician's moment of glory was brief.

"The crystal's cracked," Coolidge said. Others at the show fell silent. But as Williams was about to apologize, Coolidge broke the spell.

"It's been broken about two weeks," Coolidge told the young magician.

Williams recalled: "He played it for all it was worth."

J.B. (James Buckhannan) Williams and his wife, Frankie, recently celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary, and like most couples of 50 years, they have many memories. It's just that their stories the Etiwanda postmaster, and can shrink and break.

For packaging, Solberg suggests nylon tape. He said customers can buy some supplies at the post office, including "jiffy bags, padded envelopes good for shirts and cloth-type dolls and cardboard cartons. But we don't sell tape anymore."

He suggests customers write directly on their packages with a felt marker rather than sticking a label, which could fall off, on a box.

"Mail as early in the day as possible," he continued.

Any items with negotiable or actual value can be insured for up to $400. "Using register insurance, we could insure and mail the Hope Diamond, and we have done it," Solberg said.

have a magic of their own.

The Williamses have acted in traveling tent shows, performed countless magic acts, and run their own magic shops. He's flown with Lindbergh, performed for kings, and been dubbed a Kentucky colonel.

It hasn't always been an easy life, but it's seldom been dull.

"It was work, but if I had a job to do, I did it without complaining," Mrs. Williams said.

Both J.B. and Frankie were reared in Texas. They met when Frankie went to watch a traveling medicine show in which he was performing.

"He was reading sealed messages," Frankie said. "He looked up at me and said, 'You'd better be careful what you're thinking about or you'll get in trouble.'"

"Those were the first words he said to me, and it's been 50 years of trouble," she added, laughing. After their marriage, the couple spent several summers acting in tent shows that toured small towns in the South. The cast had just a couple of weeks to put together a three-act play, and had to memorize roles for at least seven shows during any given tour.

"We got top money ... $40 a week as a team," J.B. said.

J.B. — who still has a trace of his Texas accent — played an Englishman in one play. He said a news reporter noted after one performance that the Englishman sounded part southern.

"The boss said, 'Yeh, in a way. He's from southern England,'" Frankie recalled.

When the tent shows closed for the winter, J.B. performed magic in schools. Before long, he was

"Magic is a great leveler," J.B. said. "The more stable, or intelligent, or successful they are, the easier they are to fool."

Magic today is certainly different from the time when magicians made frequent stage appearances.

J.B. doesn't like the "new" magic, at least not the acts that rely heavily on trick boxes.

"It takes away from the magic," he explained. "You are just an actor in a stage show." At the same time, he remains optimistic about magic's future. "There's a good market for magic," J.B. said. "There just aren't many magicians because you don't make them overnight." □

Dave Chapple gained recognition in the early 1970's as an All-Pro punter for the Rams, now it's because of his wildlife art.

Chapple's no stranger to animals

By Tom Vivian

During his five years as a punter in the National Football League, Dave Chapple was surrounded by "animals."

Although they're recognized as bona fide athletes, professional kickers are usually smaller and less aggressive than their fellow players.

For a punter, when things go wrong — such as a bad snap — their contact with the game's larger, more destructive players can be quite an experience.

It's somewhat akin to an English gentleman lost in the wild.

Although Dave Chapple suffered through many such occurrences, he was surrounded by "wildlife" long before his NFL playing days.

An all-pro selection with the Los Angeles Rams in 1972, Chapple has been involved in naturalist painting since his youth.

"Ever since I retired (in 1975), it's (painting) my full-time occupation," Chapple said.

An Irvine resident, he completed a one-man showing last week at the Warpole Galleries in Upland. During the two-day exhibition, he displayed his original etchings and wildlife paintings.

Wildlife art used to be somewhat of an "ugly stepchild" in the art world. But in recent years, it has gained both respect and acceptance from collectors and critics.

"Apparently it's gained a lot of acceptance," Chapple said. "I would say it has a wide audience."

Chapple first gained serious contact with art when a childhood illness severely restricted his activities for the better part of year. Always drawn to animals and wildlife, his artwork provided an outlet to express his love for the outdoors.

"From my standpoint, I just love animals," he said. "If I wasn't doing this, I'd be involved in some type of wildlife oriented occupation."

But Chapple is painting, and apparently doing quite a nice job of it.

He has been a finalist three times in the

Boyette's in middle of action for UCLA's volleyball squad

By Tom Vivian

When Michelle Boyette was the stalwart of the all-West Valley girls' volleyball team two years ago, she could best be described as a very big fish in a small pond.

However, as a sophomore setter on UCLA's third-ranked women's team, she has developed into a fast-growing fish in an extremely large lake.

During her senior year at Alta Loma High School, she was recruited by Stanford, Hawaii, San Diego State, and UCLA's main nemesis, the University of Pacific. Pretty heady stuff for a 17-year-old.

Her first year in Westwood, however, was anything but spectacular.

Boyette did everything but lead cheers during the Alta Loma games, but during her freshman season, most of her time was spent on the bench.

The 5-foot-11 former CIF 2A Player of the Year wasted little time in reversing that unfortunate trend. This year, she was one of only two players to see action in all 46 regular season matches as the Bruins went 45-1.

Although Boyette is no longer a single shining star, she said in a phone interview recently that her collegiate career has gone pretty much as she expected.

"Here (UCLA) it's a lot more hard work," Boyette said. "Better players always means better competition."

According to Andy Banachowski, UCLA's volleyball coach for the past 17 seasons, Boyette has risen to the higher level of play.

"I think Michelle is a very effective hitter," Banachowski said. "If she continues to improve, she's going to become on the premier setters in the country."

In addition, Wilkinson also won more golf balls in the Birdies and state's annual duck stamp contest, and has been invited to show his works at some of the country's most prestigious naturalist museums, including the Leigh Yawkey Woodson Art Museum.

He said he usually does about 15 commissioned paintings a year, and his charcoal etchings command anywhere from $50 to $250.

Chapple explained that although he was developing his artistic talents while in the NFL, he kept his work pretty much under wraps.

"At the time, it was something I did and more or less kept to myself," he said.

Although he kept quiet about it, his talent developed so rapidly that soon knowledge of his work was widespread.

"Each off-season, I was accomplishing more and more in art," Chapple said.

Finally, on the advice of friends in the art business, he made the break from football and devoted his full attentions to his artistic endeavors.

"It was not as rosy as a beginning as I thought it would be," Chapple said. "But it's worked out well."

Golfers sought for CC team

Experienced golfers are currently being sought for Chaffey College's golf team. Head coach Mary Williams has set the first team meeting for Jan. 4, with practice to start a week later.

Interested persons should contact Williams Bob Olivera at the school's athletic department.

Gary Harvo will assist Williams this year and Tim Haas will also add development aid to the squad.

The Panthers will play their home matches this year at Upland Hills Country Club, site of their recent successful fund raising tournament. In addition, Chaffey will participate in the College of the Sequoias and Desert Classic tournaments.

Interested athletes must meet admittance requirements at the college, and enroll in 12 semester hours throughout the season.

Michelle Boyette in role as setter for UCLA's volleyball team.

Boyette's in charge

In volleyball, that's quite an accomplishment.

On the court, the setter controls the offensive strategy and flow of the game. Using ball control techniques, she sends the ball to her team's most effective spikers, who attempt the high-percentage skill shots.

Playing the position involves a lot of responsibility. And Boyette is not one to shirk from the task.

"I like it, it's like taking charge of things," she said.

"A game could be won or lost by the setter's position."

Obviously, Boyette held up her share of the responsibility.

During the regular season, she was accorded West Coast Athletic Association honorable mention, led the team in set assists (354), was fourth in kill shots (236), and placed third in team digs with 164.

Banachowski credits her impressive credentials and performances with her aggressive style of play. Women's volleyball may be played by young ladies, but it's no game for the faint of heart.

"She's a really good competitor," Banachowski said. "She doesn't like to lose."

UCLA travels to Purdue this week for the Midwest Regionals, and despite their conference title, they face some difficult hurdles in the stretch half of their drive for an elusive national title.

A psychology/kinesiology major, Boyette is optimistic about her unit's chances in postseason competition.

"I think we'll do well," she said. "We've been training hard."

According to Solberg, the post offices are more lenient about accepting packages than a privately

Customers should not use string, according to Skovgaard. "String will clog up the post office machinery."

High drama and a moral could be added to our movie by including a book burning or censorship incident by a group of well-meaning though obviously ignorant citizens. Thus we would have drama, comedy, violence, kinky sex, and music — a sure-fire combination for a blockbuster movie. The only essential element that's missing would be a romantic interest. I have an idea for that too.

Tax changes could bite into income

By Bob Moering
Sales Representative
Investors Diversified Services

Changes in tax law point out the need for frequent and thorough personal financial planning.

For example, if you receive Social Security benefits and also own tax-exempt municipal bonds, the Social Security Act Amendments of 1983 could have a substantial impact on you. Beginning in 1984, some Social Security benefits will be taxed depending on the beneficiaries' adjusted gross income and tax exempt income. Social Security benefits that will be subject to federal income taxation include old age, survivor's and disability benefits.

Under these changes, a new formula will be used to determine whether — and how much — your retirement benefits will be taxed. This formula will include all income from municipal bonds.

Basically, you'll owe a tax if the total of your adjusted gross income for next year plus half of your Social Security benefits plus any tax exempt interest income (for such things as municipal bond interest income) exceeds $25,000 for individuals or $32,000 for couples who file jointly. The threshold is zero for married couples filing separately.

Mail early is advice for holiday packages

Dee Dee Duenez, customer service representative with UPS.

"The business has an account with us and we will pick up (packages) from them. The offices are all right but they charge extra, adding on more to package cost to the customer," she said.

Holidays are a busy time for the carrier service. To meet customer needs, extra counters are manned and the Baldwin Park office will be open Saturday and Dec. 17 for people who can't get there during weekday hours.

"Each package is automatically insured for $100," Duenez said, "and customers can insure a package for more."

She said UPS accepts packages in corrugated boxes sealed with nylon, duct or gum tape. "Customers can write on the box or put on a label, whatever is easier."

Ground service to the East Coast takes about a week, according to Duenez. "Ninety-nine percent of our packages arrive on time. During the holidays, when we have a heavier load, a package may be a day later." □ and propellor went around. It never became very popular.

The Nicholson family occasionally visited there to gaze at these marvels, and to see them in action on Sunday afternoon. In those days, when an airplane was heard overhead, everyone ran outside to gawk.

More about local flying next week.

John H. Nicholson is an Upland resident who here chronicles his family's history in the West Valley.

The tax will apply to either half the Social Security benefits or half the amount that's over $25,000 or $32,000 base figure, whichever is smaller. If the resulting amount does not exceed the base figure, then no additional tax is due.

Let's say a married couple filing jointly has $30,000 in adjusted gross income, as well as $10,000 in income from municipal bonds. In addition, they receive $10,000 in Social Security benefits.

Their combined income — their adjusted gross income, plus their municipal bond interest and half the Social Security benefits, comes to $45,000. After subtracting the $32,000 base figure, the couple has excess income of $13,000. To determine their new taxable income, they would then add $5,000 (half the Social Security benefits, which is smaller than half the excess of $13,000) to their original taxable income.

The result is that the couple's taxable income would rise to $35,000.

While tax exempt income is included in the formula, in no event will tax exempt income be subject to federal income tax. Also, while the benefits may be taxed, they are not considered earned income or compensation for purposes of the earned income credit, the IRA deduction, the two earner married couple deduction and the foreign earned income exclusion.

Other federal assistance benefits, such as maternal and health care, aid to the blind, aid to dependent children and veteran's benefits, will remain exempt from income tax.

Under the new provisions, the Social Security Administration will be reporting to the IRS the amount of Social Security benefits that individuals are receiving.

The effects of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1983 will vary from individual to individual. It is important for taxpayers to seek updated advice from a tax professional, and accountant or a personal financial planner, to help begin planning now for these changes in tax law. □
